ABSTRACT

The directory presents state-by-state listings for special programs, schools, and services for persons with learning disabilities. Listings cover all ages and grade levels, from infants to adults, from preschool to college. In addition to the listings, which consititute the bulk of the material, are sections on the nature and extent of LD, the rights of children with LD (regarding Individual Education Programs, due process, and discrimination complaints), and alternatives for LD adults (such as college, vocational training, and state and regional adult programs and services). Sources of information and help are presented in terms of national organizations, U.S. and Canadian agencies, LD information centers, and special materials for individuals with LD. State listings touch on organizational offices, State Department of Education LD personnel, private and day schools, summer camps and programs, college and university special programs and services, hospital clinics and other services. The guide concludes with an annotated list of books and other materials related to LD and a dictionary of LD terms. (CL)

Preface

It is with pleasure that I introduce this revised and much larger second edition of the FCLD Guide. In the preface to the first edition, I promised that with your help, future editions would be better, more comprehensive, and more useful.

As a result of your suggestions, this edition includes nearly twice as much information on special programs, schools, and services for children and adults with learning disabilities.

To make it easier to locate appropriate resources, new, separate listings for summer camps and programs, hospital clinics, and other services have been added. College and university programs that are designed specifically for students with learning disabilities are now highlighted in the listings.

The field of learning disabilities is now almost 25 years old and the first children recognized and diagnosed as learning disabled are now adults with adult needs and concerns. In response, several sections of this Guide have been revised to help meet the growing needs of older persons with learning disabilities. For example, when a private and day school offers services to adults with learning disabilities, this is now indicated. Also, the section on alternatives for learning disabled adults has been revised and greatly expanded.

Although these changes and additions for adults are important, the major emphasis of this Guide continues to be on helping children. Nearly two million children in the United States have been diagnosed as learning disabled. Unfortunately, many more are still undiagnosed—unable to understand why they cannot learn as other children do.

As a parent, it is my fondest wish to bring hope to these intelligent, often "gifted" children and their families. Early and accurate diagnosis, proper remediation, and the informed and caring support of parents and professionals can make the difference that will assure these children the productive, happy life that they deserve. The information in this Guide is intended to help in the difficult and ongoing task of finding appropriate schools, services, and support for children who must cope with this baffling hidden handicap.

The Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities was established in 1977 with two primary goals: to promote public awareness of learning disabilities, and to provide funding for programs that serve children with learning disabilities and their families. The Foundation also publishes Their World, an annual magazine for parents and professionals. The magazine tells real-life stories about the ways that families cope with learning disabilities.

The Foundation's public awareness campaign makes maximum use of public service advertising. Visual and print ads created and donated by Grey Advertising, Inc. appear in weekly news magazines and on all major radio and television networks. You may have first learned about FCLD and this Guide through one of these public service announcements.

We are extremely proud of the Foundation's ongoing grants program. FCLD supports innovative, action-oriented programs that specifically address the needs of persons with learning disabilities. These programs often cannot get funding from any other source. Many are models for similar programs in other locations and settings. Foundation grantees include schools, camps, after school recreation programs, and day care centers.

Cultural institutions such as the Boston Children's Museum, Capital Children's Museum in Washington, D.C., and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City have received FCLD funding. LD Teenline, the national toll free information hotline operated by the Parents' Campaign for Handicapped Children and Youth, is supported by FCLD grants. Because undetected learning disabilities and delinquent behavior are often linked, FCLD funds a number of projects for youth at risk.

The Foundation has granted a total of more than one million dollars to projects all over the United States.

FCLD is committed to supporting and facilitating the efforts of parents and professionals to help children and adults with learning disabilities. This second edition of the FCLD Guide is evidence of that continuing commitment.

How to Use This Guide

The search for appropriate programs and services for children and adults with learning disabilities is often a time-consuming and frustrating task. This second FCLD Guide, revised and greatly expanded, can be an important aid in that search.

Extensive state-by-state listings of special programs, schools, and services for persons with learning disabilities are a major feature of this Guide. The programs and services listed cover all ages and grade levels, from infants to adults, and from preschool to college.

In addition to the state-by-state listings of resources, this Guide includes a number of other important features, articles, and sections. Among these are a concise introduction to and overview of learning disabilities, an outline of the rights of children with learning disabilities, definitions of LD terms, and a discussion of educational and vocational alternatives for older students and adults with learning disabilities.

In short, this Guide is a comprehensive and easy-to-use directory of learning disabilities information, programs, materials, and resources.

Following are descriptions of the major sections in this Guide and the information that each contains:

The detailed Table of Contents lists section titles and the major topics covered in each section. Use this information to locate specific topics of interest.

Learning Disabilities: The Hidden Handicap offers an introduction to and overview of learning disabilities, including definitions, causes, effects, prevalence, warning signs, and the future outlook for persons with learning disabilities.

The Rights of Children with Learning Disabilities outlines the provisions of Public Law 94-142, the Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975, and includes a step-by-step explanation of the development and implementation of an Individualized Education Plan (IEP). Also included is a synopsis of due process and specific suggestions on who to contact for information or complaints related to a federal program.

The section Beyond High School: Alternatives for LD Adults explores some of the new educational and vocational options and opportunities for persons with learning disabilities. College, vocational training, and entering the work force are discussed and suggestions offered.

The section Sources of Information and Help includes:

—Up-to-date addresses for and descriptions of major national organizations in the United States and Canada concerned with learning disabilities.
—U.S. Department of Education officials and other important federal agencies and services.
—Learning disabilities information centers that provide information and publications on learning disabilities and related topics.
—Sources of special materials for the learning disabled, including recorded books and book recording services.

The State-by-State Listings of special programs, schools, and services is a comprehensive directory of resources for persons with learning disabilities. Information in this section is in alphabetical order by state to make it easier to locate resources in a particular geographic area. Specifically, the state-by-state listings include:

—Offices of Organizations Concerned with Learning Disabilities. These are the state offices of national organizations concerned with learning disabilities. These offices may be able to provide referrals to private consultants, therapists, and other learning disabilities specialists. These offices may also be able to provide information on recreational and support groups for teenagers and adults and other local or area resources not listed in this Guide.

—State Department of Education Learning Disabilities Personnel. These people can often provide useful information and materials on learning disabilities, student rights, educational programs, and vocational training. They may also be able to act as mediators and intercede with local school districts.

—Private and Day Schools. Use the information in this section to help locate appropriate preschool programs, special educational programs, school-related summer programs, diagnostic or counseling services, and special recreational activities and/or facilities. In some cases, schools that use particular therapies, techniques, or approaches are identified.

—Summer Camps and Programs. Listed here are camps and programs not operated by or affiliated with a private or day school. Recreational activities, academic programs, and special programs and services are described. See the heading "Private and Day Schools" for programs that are school operated or affiliated.

—College and University Special Programs and Services. The institutions listed provide special services for students with learning disabilities. Many have special learning disabilities centers or clinics.

● These large black dots are used in the college and university listings to highlight a new feature of this edition of the FCLD Guide—descriptions of the growing number of special college and university programs that are designed specifically to help students with learning disabilities.

—Hospital Clinics. All of the hospital clinics listed offer services to the learning disabled on an outpatient basis. Many also have inpatient programs. Services offered vary widely and may include testing and diagnosis, school and other educational programs, tutoring, counseling, therapy, and social services.

—Other Services. These include private learning disabilities clinics, educational centers, day and residential treatment centers, rehabilitation centers, and mental health centers.

Books and Other Materials is a bibliography of materials related to learning disabilities. A brief description of each publication is included. Most of the books and materials listed are recent. However, some older materials are included because they are still relevant, important, and helpful. Information on how to order the books and materials is provided.

A Dictionary of LD Terms gives clear and concise definitions of many potentially confusing words and terms used by educators and professionals in the learning disabilities field.

The comprehensive Index will help to locate specific schools, colleges, universities, agencies, organizations, and other information. The index can also help identify the resources available in a particular state or area.

A convenient Order Form is provided at the back of this Guide if you wish to obtain additional copies.

IMPORTANT NOTE: The FCLD Learning Disabilities Resource Guide is published by the Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities as a service to parents, professionals, educators, and others interested in and concerned about children and adults with learning disabilities. Considerable effort and expense has gone into gathering and verifying the information that it contains. However, the publisher and the Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities are not responsible for changes, errors, or omissions.

The Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities does not endorse individual consultants, schools, groups, or organizations, nor does it recommend or endorse any specific treatments, therapies, approaches, or techniques.

Learning Disabilities: The Hidden Handicap

WHAT ARE LEARNING DISABILITIES?

Learning disabilities are disorders of the mental processes that control how a person uses or understands language. Unlike physical handicaps, learning disabilities are hidden. There are no external indications that there are problems. People with learning disabilities have average or above average intelligence; some are even gifted. Their disabilities are often revealed only after careful testing and evaluation.

The concept of learning disabilities is relatively new. The term was first used in 1962 by Samuel A. Kirk in his textbook Educating Exceptional Children. Since then, a number of definitions of learning disabilities have been developed, but so far no single definition is universally accepted. In fact, efforts to identify and help learning disabled children and adults have sometimes been hampered by the inability of the experts to agree on exactly what learning disabilities are.

Learning disability is defined in Public Law 94-142, The Education for all Handicapped Children Act of 1975. Since schools that receive federal funds must use this definition, this definition is probably the most widely used and accepted:

> Specific learning disability means a disorder in one or more of the basic psychological processes involved in understanding or in using language, spoken or written, which may manifest itself in an imperfect ability to listen, think, speak, read, write, spell, or to do mathematical calculations. The term includes such conditions as perceptual handicaps, brain injury, minimal brain dysfunction, dyslexia, and developmental aphasia. The term does not include children who have learning problems that are primarily the result of visual, hearing, or motor handicaps, of mental retardation, of emotional disturbance, or of environmental, cultural, or economic disadvantage.

In September, 1984, the board of directors of ACLD, Inc., the largest organization in the United States concerned with learning disabilities and an important advocacy group for the learning disabled, adopted its own definition of specific learning disabilities.

ACLD's definition is worded so that it does not conflict with the definition in P.L. 94-142. Instead, the ACLD definition emphasizes that the condition persists throughout life and does not "go away" even with special instruction. The ACLD definition is:

> Specific Learning Disabilities is a chronic condition of presumed neurological origin which selectively interferes with the development, integration, and/or demonstration of verbal and/or nonverbal abilities.
>
> Specific Learning Disabilities exists as a distinct handicapping condition in the presence of average to superior intelligence, adequate sensory and motor systems, and adequate learning opportunities. The condition varies in its manifestations and in degree of severity.
> Throughout life the condition can affect self-esteem, education, vocation, socialization, and/or daily living activities.

Why is a clear definition of learning disabilities so important? According to ACLD, its new definition was formulated because in schools, underachievement is often equated with learning disabilities, misclassification is too common, and public funds are often being used inappropriately.

In the November 1984 issue of the Journal of Learning Disabilities, James J. Gallagher offers three additional reasons why accurate labeling of children and adults with learning disabilities is so important:

1. Accurate labeling makes it possible to provide differentiated treatment.
2. Accurate labeling provides the basis for the search for the cause of learning disabilities.
3. Accurate labeling makes it possible to obtain resources, particularly state and federal funds.

Even though experts disagree on the definition of learning disabilities, there are some assumptions about learning disabilities that are generally accepted. These assumptions include:

—Learning disabilities are caused by internal deficiencies in basic psychological processes, not by poor teaching, emotional problems, poor school attendance, or environmental factors.

—There are significant problems in learning basic skills and these problems persist.
—There is a discrepancy between a person's potential for learning and what that person actually learns.
—The person has average or above average intelligence.
—Some people, including the physically handicapped, emotionally disturbed, or socially disadvantaged, are not classified as learning disabled.

Often adding to the confusion are the specialized terms used in the learning disabilities field. Definitions of some of the most frequently used terms are offered in A Dictionary of LD Terms in this Guide.

THE CAUSES OF LEARNING DISABILITIES

Not much is known about the causes of learning disabilities. However, some general observations can be made:

—Some children develop and mature at a slower rate than others in the same age group. As a result, they may not be able to do the school work expected. This kind of learning disability is called "maturational lag."
—Some children with normal vision and hearing may misinterpret everyday sights and sounds because of some unexplained disorder of the nervous system.
—Injuries before birth or in early childhood probably account for some later learning problems.
—Children born prematurely and children who had medical problems soon after birth sometimes have learning disabilities.
—Learning disabilities tend to run in families, so some learning disabilities may be inherited.
—Learning disabilities are five times more common in boys than girls, possibly because boys tend to mature more slowly.
—Some learning disabilities appear to be linked to the irregular spelling, pronunciation, and structure of the English language. The incidence of learning disabilities is lower in Spanish or Italian-speaking countries.

THE EFFECTS OF LEARNING DISABILITIES

Until recently learning disabilities were categorized according to the area of performance they affected. Reading problems were called "dyslexia"; math problems were labeled "dycalculia"; and writing problems were called "dysgraphia." According to Larry Silver and Susan Carleton, two authorities in the field, learning disabilities are currently classified by specialists into four areas corresponding to the four basic steps in the learning process:

Input is the process of perceiving and recording information in the brain. Children and adults with input problems may have trouble seeing and hearing accurately. For example, they may confuse or reverse letters, using 3 for E, or b for d. Reading, writing, or copying designs may be difficult. They may confuse left and right, skip words and lines in reading, and misjudge depth. Eye-hand coordination may be affected, causing problems with catching and hitting a ball, jumping rope, and similar activities. Children and adults with hearing input problems may misunderstand words and respond inappropriately. They may require several repetitions of the same question before they can respond. In a classroom or work situation, sounds may distract them.

Integration involves sequencing—the ability to put things in proper order—and understanding. Problems with sequencing often affect spelling. The child or adult may include all the right letters in a word but put them in the wrong order. Recalling the sequence of events in a story or set of instructions may also be difficult. Children and adults with understanding difficulties may grasp only the literal meaning of words and gestures.

Memory involves storing and retrieving visual and auditory information. Children and adults with short-term memory problems may forget verbal instructions before they can carry them out. Children and adults with long-term memory disabilities forget information that should be stored permanently—their home addresses, for example.

Output is language and motor coordination. Children and adults with language disabilities may grope for words or use the wrong word. They may require several repetitions before responding to a question. A gross motor disability involves the coordination of large groups of muscles like those used in riding a bicycle. A problem with fine motor coordination—the coordination of small movements—often appears as poor, laborious handwriting.

In addition to the learning problems outlined above, children and adults with learning disabilities frequently have behavior problems. These behavior problems are often caused by frustration. Tasks that their peers perform easily are difficult or impossible for them. They may have trouble making friends. Occasionally they seem insensitive because they misinterpret the responses of others. A short attention span and a need to be in constant motion may also accompany learning disabilities.

THE PREVALENCE OF LEARNING DISABILITIES

According to U.S. Department of Education figures, about 1.75 million or about 4.4 percent of the approximately 40 million children enrolled in public schools have learning disabilities. For the 1982-83 school year, more than 40 percent of the nearly 4.3 million children identified by states as handicapped, or more than two out of every five handicapped children, were classified as learning disabled.

The number of children ages 3-21 identified as learning disabled varies widely from state to state because of differences in state laws, definitions, administration, and interpretation. For example, in Maryland, the state with the highest percentage in 1980, approximately 5.7 percent of school children were identified as having specific learning disabilities. In contrast, the figure for Massachusetts was 1.5 percent.

Whatever the figures, many learning disabled children in this country who are eligible for and need special education services are not receiving them. Most of these children are:

—Preschoolers and older teenagers (high school dropouts and 18 to 21-year-olds). Even though they may not be in school, these children are eligible for special services. Check with the state department of education to see what special services are available in your state. State department of education learning disability personnel are included in the State-by-State Listings in this Guide.

—Students in regular classrooms. Despite increasing efforts, some learning disabled children have not yet been identified. Research indicates that undetected learning disabilities may be the major problem of many children classified as disciplinary problems, underachievers, dropouts, and delinquents.

Children are not the only group that needs special services and support. Since learning disabilities are permanent, many of the first children diagnosed as learning disabled are now learning disabled adults. Using estimates that approximately 3 percent of the total population of the United States has learning disabilities, approximately 6 million adults in this country are learning disabled. Some of these adults have learned to live with or compensate for their disabilities. However, many still need help. As a result, support groups for learning disabled adults are being formed in many communities across the country, organizations are expanding their services for adults with learning disabilities, and new adult organizations are being created. The names of a number of groups and organizations that provide services to adults with learning disabilities are listed in the section Beyond High School: Alternatives for Learning Disabled Adults in this Guide.

LEARNING DISABILITY WARNING SIGNS

Children with learning disabilities exhibit a wide range of symptoms. These include problems with reading comprehension, spoken language, writing, or reasoning ability. Hyperactivity, inattention, and perceptual coordination problems may also be associated with learning disabilities but are not learning disabilities themselves.

Virtually every child exhibits some symptoms of learning disabilities at one time or another. However, if a child consistently lags behind his or her peers in speaking, reading, memory, or coordination, and these problems persist, then the possibility of learning disabilities must be considered.

One of the fundamental characteristics of learning disabilities is a significant difference between a child's achievement in some areas and his or her overall intelligence. Learning disabilities typically show up in five general areas:

1. Spoken language—delays, disorders, and deviations in listening and speaking.
2. Written language—difficulties with reading, writing, and spelling.
3. Arithmetic—difficulty in performing arithmetic operations or in understanding basic concepts.
4. Reasoning—difficulty in organizing and integrating thoughts.
5. Memory—difficulty in remembering information and instructions.

When parents suspect that a child might have a learning disability and feel that the child needs further testing and evaluation, Silver and Carleton offer some suggestions:

—Contact the school and arrange for testing and evaluation. Federal law requires that school districts provide special education and related services to children who need them.

—Take the child to a family physician or pediatrician for a complete physical examination. Check for correctable problems such as hearing loss or poor vision that may cause difficulty in school.

If the tests and examination indicate that the child needs special education services, a school evaluation team will meet to develop an Individualized Education Plan (IEP) geared to the child's needs. The IEP describes in detail an education plan designed to provide the child with the learning resources and skills needed to compensate for his or her disabilities. Silver and Carleton list these examples of strategies that might be employed:

—For children with reading difficulties, prerecorded materials may be used to supplement textbooks and other printed material.
—To help them deal with fine motor coordination problems, children may be encouraged to use a typewriter or tape recorder for writing.
—To compensate for memory disabilities, students may be taught to make outlines and tested immediately after drills.
—For children with hearing problems, written outlines of class presentations may be supplied.

For more information on IEPs and the IEP process, see The Rights of Children with Learning Disabilities in this Guide.

THE OUTLOOK FOR PERSONS WITH LEARNING DISABILITIES

Not many years ago, learning disabilities were unknown and unrecognized. Children and adults with these hidden handicaps had to struggle alone to overcome them. Students who could not cope were relegated to classes for slow learners, classified as behavior problems, or simply passed from grade to grade until they ultimately dropped out. Few colleges or universities offered special programs or services. Workers with learning disabilities had to struggle without understanding or support.

Federal and state legislation now guarantee children with learning disabilities the right to a free and appropriate education. Many colleges and universities now offer programs specifically designed for students with learning disabilities. A few vocational training programs now accommodate the learning disabled, and spurred by new research, may gain momentum. Employer attitudes are also gradually shifting as they learn more about learning disabilities.

Even the publishing industry is becoming more aware of the special needs of persons with learning disabilities. Since the first edition of this Guide was printed in 1984, at least two commercial companies have published their own guides.

Schools and Learning Disabled Students. According to Madeleine Will, Assistant Secretary for Special Education and Rehabilitative Services in the U.S. Department of Education, the continually increasing number of students counted as learning disabled has stimulated concerted state efforts to:

1) assure the consistent application of eligibility criteria, and
2) strengthen the capacity of regular education programs to deal with learning problems.

The rate of growth of the learning disabled school population appears to be slowing, Assistant Secretary Will says. However, this is a result of increased state efforts to assure that children are accurately classified, not because there are few learning disabled students, she explains.

Preschool (birth-age 5) programs for the handicapped, including children with learning disabilities, are also on the rise. Federal preschool incentive grants now encourage states to begin special education for children as early as possible. According to U.S. Department of Education figures, nearly a quarter of the total increase in the number of children who received special education services in 1982-83 were in the 3 to 5-year-old age group. Thirty-eight states now require that services be provided to at least some portion of the preschool population.

In the elementary and secondary schools, evaluation procedures are constantly being refined and teachers are learning how to recognize and help learning disabled students. Children with learning problems are being identified earlier and special help is started sooner. Experts in special education have developed more effective techniques for helping children overcome their learning problems. The end result is that children with learning disabilities now have an increasingly better chance at a positive school experience.

For students planning to go to a college or university, a growing number of these institutions now offer special programs and support services specifically for students with learning disabilities. For a list of these schools, see the "College and University Special Programs and Services" section of the State-by-State Listings in this Guide. Special accommodations are available for taking the achievement tests required by many colleges and universities for admission. For more information on these special tests, see the "College" section of Beyond High School: Alternatives for Learning Disabled Adults in this Guide.

Vocational Training and Employment. The vocational training and rehabilitation needs of persons with learning disabilities are becoming the focus of increasing attention. Several research programs and pilot projects are currently under way. An example is a four-year project recently undertaken jointly by the Virginia Department of Rehabilitative Services and the Woodrow Wilson Rehabilitation Center in Fisherville, Virginia. The objectives of the project, which is funded by a grant from the National Institute of Handicapped Research, are to:

1. define and identify vocational rehabilitation needs for adults with severe learning disabilities.
2. define and identify existing and potential barriers to the provision of services to learning disabled adults.
3. identify the factors which result in successful job placement and job maintenance.
4. develop and test appropriate diagnostic instruments.
5. develop and test vocational and education training strategies and materials.

There is a growing trend toward expansion of vocational services and the use of community resources to provide vocational training, Will says. "The Department of Education will assist in the expansion and improvement of transitional services for handicapped children and youth (including the learning disabled) through development of curriculum materials, research on the accessibility of employment training, follow-up studies of secondary-age students, demonstration and dissemination of successful practices, communication among the education and business communities, and development of interagency agreements," she says.

Although much still needs to be done, employer attitudes are also changing as they become more aware of and knowledgeable about learning disabilities. Already, some employers are willing to make accommodations for employees with learning disabilities. For more information on vocational training and entering the work force, see Beyond High School: Alternatives for Learning Disabled Adults in this Guide.

The Future. Personal computers—in school and at home—hold promise as educational tools for persons with learning disabilities. Computers are fast, multi-sensory, and give students immediate reinforcement. With computer instruction, the pace, content, and length of time available for response can be adjusted to the needs of individual learners. Unlike human instructors, computers also have infinite patience and allow for virtually infinite repetition of a task without external pressure on the learner.

Computers are not a cure-all, however, cautions Jane Johnston, national coordinator for Time Out to Enjoy, Inc. Based on her experiences, using computers often requires many of the same skills that persons with learning disabilities have trouble with, she notes in the organization's newsletter. Use of a computer keyboard requires eye-hand coordination. Some computer software contains printed information, requiring reading skills. Computer screens are small and letters on the monitor may be in different colors or blurred. Sound effects may be harsh, loud, or hard to adjust.

In the medical field, recent research seems to support the theory that at least some learning disabilities are hereditary. An article in the November/December, 1984 issue of ACLD Newsbriefs reports that a team of researchers at the Boys Town Institute for Communication Disorders has linked reading disability with a gene. The researchers tested 84 persons in nine multigeneration families. They found that twelve men, ten women, nineteen boys and nine girls had the disorder. Blood groupings and other genetic markers were then used to pinpoint the chromosome on which the "can't read" gene was located, the article reports.

"Gene mapping, genetic screening techniques and gene splicing technology offer hope that someday disordered genes can be diagnosed and repaired as unemotionally—if not as easily—as getting a shot of penicillin," the article concludes.

Whatever hope new technology and new research hold for the future, learning disabilities are today's reality for many. However, history indicates that persons with learning disabilities often have striking abilities along with their disabilities. With the help and support of informed and caring parents, teachers, employers, and professionals, these children and adults can learn to build on their strengths and minimize their disabilities.

They can succeed—in school and beyond.

The Rights of Children with Learning Disabilities

Children with handicaps—including children with learning disabilities—have a right to a free and appropriate public education. This right is guaranteed by the federal Education for All Handicapped Children Act (Public Law 94-142) of 1975. P.L. 94-142 stipulates that:

- —all children with handicaps have a right to receive a free, appropriate education at the public expense.
- —every child with handicaps has a right to receive an education based on a full evaluation and assessment of individual needs.
- —every child who receives special education services must have an Individualized Education Plan (IEP). The IEP must state what special educational and related services the child will receive.
- —parents of children with handicaps have a right to a due process hearing if they disagree with the identification, evaluation, or placement of their child.
- —every child with handicaps has a right to be educated with nonhandicapped children to the maximum extent appropriate.

ASSESSMENT

Assessment is the first step in the process of gathering and using information to make decisions about the education of a student. Assessment involves more than just testing. Assessment involves looking at a child and the child's environment, drawing together a variety of information, and using that information to develop a plan of action.

Screening is often the first step in the assessment process. Screening can involve formal measurements or informal observations. Screening identifies children who may have problems. Because screening is quick and inexpensive, schools usually screen everyone.

When a child is identified as one who may have a problem, the school system must inform the child's parents and describe what further evaluation is planned. Before the school proceeds with this evaluation, the parents must agree to it in writing. Parents will be told about their rights, including the right to see all records and to get a report of the results that the school will use to make decisions.

A complete assessment may involve others in addition to a child's classroom teacher. When learning disabilities are suspected, specialists such as psychologists, speech and language therapists, occupational therapists, physical education specialists, and others may be involved. Together, these specialists form a multidisciplinary team that assesses all aspects of the suspected handicap.

Many different kinds of information are used in evaluating children suspected of having learning disabilities. Depending on the child and the nature of the suspected handicap, this information might include:

—school records.
—interviews with parents, principal, counselor.
—results of intelligence and other standardized tests.
—informal measures such as checklists, observations, and samples of classwork.

Parents can request that a qualified school staff person explain the results of the assessment to them. If a determination is made that the child needs special education and related services, the school must develop an IEP for the child. Parents have the right to participate in every decision relating to their child. They should be involved in the development of the IEP. Parents should be notified of the meeting and the school must make every attempt to:

1) notify parents of the meeting early enough to ensure that they have the opportunity to attend; and
2) schedule the meeting at a mutually acceptable time and place.

If neither parent can attend, the school must use other methods to insure parent participation, including individual or conference telephone calls. A meeting may be conducted without a parent only if the school is unable to convince the parents that they should attend. In this case, the school must have a record of its attempts to arrange a mutually acceptable time and place.

Parents may request an assessment if they feel that their child needs special education services. The school must answer the parents' request in writing. If the school refuses to provide special education services, it must provide written notice telling why the service was refused. This written notice must also provide a full explanation of all of the rights of parents under P.L. 94-142.

Parents can get an independent assessment from an outside expert if they disagree with the school's assessment results. The parents may have to pay for this outside assessment if the school can prove at a due process hearing that its assessment was appropriate. In any case, the parents have the right to have information from the outside assessment considered when their child's Individualized Education Plan is prepared.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ABOUT IEPs

What is an IEP?

An IEP, or Individualized Education Plan, is a written statement of special education and related services for a child. All children who receive special education services under P.L. 94-142 must have an IEP.

What's included in an IEP?

According to P.L. 94-142, an IEP must include the following:

1. A statement of the child's present level of educational performance, which could include, depending on the nature of the handicap: academic achievement, social adaptation, prevocational and vocational skills, sensory and motor skills, self-help skills, and speech and language skills. This statement must be based on evaluation, and it must be documented.

2. A statement of annual goals.

3. A statement of short term instructional objectives (the intermediate steps that make up the goals).

4. A statement of specific special education and related services to be provided and who will provide them.

5. A statement of the extent to which the child can participate in regular educational programs.

6. A statement of the projected dates for the initiation of special services and the duration of special services.

7. A statement of the appropriate objective criteria and evaluation procedures that will be used to measure progress toward the goals. Progress must be evaluated at least annually.

Is the school responsible for making sure that a child achieves all of the goals stated in the IEP?

No. The school is responsible for providing the services written into an IEP, but it cannot be legally bound if a child does not achieve the goals.

Who develops the IEP?

According to P.L. 94-142, the participants at the meeting to develop the IEP are:

—A representative of the school or public agency other than the child's teacher. This could be a special education teacher, learning disabilities specialist, or the school principal.

—The child's teacher. If the child has more than one teacher, the state may specify which teacher will participate in the meeting.

—One or both of the child's parents.

—The child, where appropriate.

—Other individuals at the discretion of the parents or the state agency.

What is an IEP meeting?

The IEP meeting or conference is usually held in the school with the individuals listed earlier present. The purpose of the meeting is to develop the child's Individualized Education Plan.

What does the school do before an IEP meeting?

When a child is suspected of having a handicap, the school first arranges for an individual evaluation of the child's educational needs. This evaluation must be done by a team of qualified persons and cover all areas related to the handicap. If the evaluation shows or seems to show that the child needs special education and related services, an IEP must be developed.

What can parents do before an IEP meeting?

Parents can prepare for the IEP meeting by looking realistically at their child's strengths and weaknesses, visiting their child's classes, and talking to their child about his or her feelings about school. It is a good idea for parents to write down what they think their child will be able to accomplish during the school year. Also, parents should make notes about what they want to say at the meeting.

What do the parents do at an IEP meeting?

Parents should express their feelings about their child's educational program and ask questions about things they don't understand. Parents can also help the school staff with information and insights about their child.

Can the school make decisions about a child without parental permission?

No. Parental permission must be obtained in writing before a child is initially evaluated to determine if the child has a handicap and to determine the child's special needs. Permission is also required before the child is placed in, transferred to or from, or denied placement in special education.

What if the parents disagree with the school about what is appropriate for their child?

First they should try to settle the disagreement. If the parents cannot reach a satisfactory agreement, they have a right to due process. See the section on "Due Process in Brief" later in this article.

How do parents get a due process hearing?

First, they should contact the school in writing and request a hearing. The parents will be notified of the date of the hearing by a hearing officer or a representative of the hearing officer. The school has a responsibility to inform the parents of any free or low cost legal services available in the area. The parents have a right to legal counsel and to present witnesses at the hearing.

Before the hearing, the parents should review all school reports, files, and records. A record of the hearing will be made. The parents have a right to a word-by-word copy (written or taped) of what is said. The hearing is closed and confidential unless the parents decide that they want the hearing to be public. A decision will be made by an impartial hearing officer and sent to the parents within 45 days of the hearing.

Throughout this process, the child must remain in his or her current placement, unless the parents and the school agree on a different temporary placement.

What can the parents do if they still disagree, even after the due process hearing?

Parents can appeal the decision of the hearing officer to the state department of education. Department personnel will examine the hearing record. They may ask for additional information from either or both sides. They will make an independent decision. If the parents or school still disagree, the case may be appealed in civil courts.

What should parents do if school personnel use unfamiliar words and terms?

Definitions of many of these words and terms are included in A Dictionary of LD Terms in this Guide. Also, parents should ask for an explanation when a word or term is unfamiliar. It's important that everyone understand what is being said. Parents need to know that the professionals understand the important things they know about their child. The professionals want the parents to understand what they have found out about the child from the assessment and how they propose to help.

What should parents do after the IEP is developed?

Parents should let teachers know that they are interested in their child's education. If possible, they should visit the classroom, or even volunteer to help. Regular telephone talks with teachers can also be helpful. Parents should ask for suggestions on how they can continue, expand, and reinforce school activities at home. They should let the school know that they would like to be called if they are needed. Also, they should tell the teacher of any activities or significant events that may influence their child's performance in school.

How can parents make sure that the IEP is being implemented?

Parents can ask that samples of the child's work be sent home. If the parents have questions, they should make an appointment to discuss new strategies to meet the child's goals.

When parent want to meet with the teacher, they should take the initiative and call and arrange a visit.

Parents should ask themselves: Is our child reasonably happy? Does he or she feel good about school? Talk to the child about what is going on. Does the child seem to be making progress toward the goals of the IEP? If not, and the parents notice it first, they should contact the school and talk about it.

What about minority children with handicaps?

Sometimes race or cultural background make assessment difficult, especially when children speak another language or do not speak standard English well. These children may appear to have hearing or communications problems, or to be slow learners. They may not understand directions or words on tests, or may be unable to respond correctly.

A child's cultural values may affect behavior in ways that teachers or school psychologists do not understand, even though the behavior is perfectly acceptable in the child's own culture. Assessment instruments or their scoring systems may be biased.

In the past, minority group students were overrepresented in some special education classes. They were sometimes labeled behavior or learning problems on the basis of culturally accepted behavior.

The law stipulates that schools can no longer place children in special programs on the basis of only one test. The evaluation must include several tests and observations and the tests must be given in the child's primary language.

The law also says that the school must use the parents' primary language to communicate with them about their child.

DUE PROCESS IN BRIEF

Following is a summary of the rights of children with handicaps:

Active Participation in the IEP—Parents must give their permission for release of records, preplacement evaluation, and initial placement of their child.

The Parents Must Be Told—before any action regarding identification, evaluation, program, or placement.

Due Process Hearing—If the parents do not agree with the school's plans for their child and they cannot resolve their disagreement informally, the parents are entitled to a free hearing with an impartial hearing officer.

Communication—must be clear and simple and in the parents' native language by a method of communication they can understand. The school must explain everything until the parents understand it.

Information—The parents may review all educational records, request copies of these records (there may be a charge for the copies), and request removal of information that they think is false or misleading.

Independent Educational Evaluation—The parents may obtain an independent educational evaluation at their own expense.

Confidentiality—All information on a handicapped child must be kept confidential.

FILING A DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT

When anyone feels that discrimination on the basis of physical or mental handicap exists in any education-related program operated by an institution receiving federal funding from the U.S. Department of Education, that person may file a formal complaint with the federal Office of Civil Rights serving his or her state.

The complaint should be filed in writing no later than 180 days after the discrimination occurred. The letter should explain who was discriminated against, how the person was harmed, who to contact for further information, and the name, address, and telephone number of the person filing the complaint. Include as much background information as possible. If necessary, ask regional office personnel for help in writing the complaint.

Below is a list of Office of Civil Rights regional offices and the states served by each office:

Beyond High School: Alternatives for LD Adults

As public awareness of learning disabilities and the special needs of persons with these hidden handicaps increases, programs and support services for learning disabled adults are also increasing. As a result, persons with learning disabilities have more options than ever before.

After high school, persons with learning disabilities have three major options: attending a college or university, vocational training, or entering the work force. Which of these options is most appropriate depends on the learning disabled person's academic preparation, maturity, financial resources, social skills, motivation, and ability to act independently.

Colleges and universities across the country are developing special programs designed specifically to assist and support students with learning disabilities. Landmark College, exclusively for dyslexics, is scheduled to open in Putney, Vermont, in the fall of 1985.

Vocational training and rehabilitation for persons with learning disabilities is getting increasing attention. In 1984, an entire quarterly issue of the Journal of Rehabilitation was devoted to vocational rehabilitation services and methods for training learning disabled adults. In addition, the unique learning styles and special training needs of learning disabled adults are the focus of several current research projects. For persons with learning disabilities entering the work force, a wider range of opportunities is now available. As a result of growing awareness of the special needs of persons with learning disabilities, employers are increasingly willing to make on-the-job accommodations. Job possibilities are opening up that might not even have been considered a few years ago.

Following are discussions of each of the three major options available to the learning disabled after high school.

COLLEGE

For some students with learning disabilities, only minimal services will be necessary for success at college. For others, a strong program of special support services may be crucial.

In the State-by-State Listings in this Guide, only those colleges and universities that offer special services for students with learning disabilities are listed. Keep in mind that in many cases these services are also available to other students.

● This symbol highlights a college or university program designed specifically for the learning disabled.

A college or university with a program designed specifically for the learning disabled may be the best choice for students who need extensive support services. However, the structure of special programs and the services provided vary widely from college to college. Typically, a special program acts as a support system for a student's regular, full-time college curriculum. This support often includes such services as:

—diagnostic testing.
—special classes in basic skills, study habits, time management, and note taking.
—individual tutoring and counseling.
—special study aids such as taped books.
—a full-time learning disabilities specialist.

Participation in the program may be limited to one or two years. The goal of many of these special programs is to withdraw special services as students progress and no longer need them.

Some special programs limit students with learning disabilities to only a few classes, or require them to take special classes. The goal of these programs is to eventually mainstream learning disabled students into the regular college program.

College and university requirements for admission and for participation in special learning disability programs also vary. The majority require learning disabled students to meet standard admissions requirements and also meet the special requirements of the learning disability program. These special requirements may include verification of learning disability through diagnostic tests, recommendations, a personal writing sample, and an interview.

In some cases, applications from learning disabled students are turned over to the director of the special program for consideration. The director conducts the interview and then makes a recommendation on whether the applicant should be accepted. The college or university then makes the final decision.

When investigating a college or university, ask if there are additional fees for the special program, and if the length of time that students are allowed to participate in the program is limited.

For first-hand evaluations of a program, contact past participants. The director of the program should be able to provide interested applicants with a list of names.

Finally, if there is no special program listed in this Guide for any of the colleges and universities in your area, check with your community college. Many community colleges offer some kind of special program for persons with learning disabilities.

In addition to providing information on specific colleges and universities, the descriptions make it possible to compare the types and extent of services offered at different colleges and universities. Of course, other factors such as size, location, type of school and general academic program should be considered in addition to special programs and services.

Begin the selection process early, suggests Barbara Cordoni, associate professor of special education at Southern Illinois University in an article in the Journal of Learning Disabilities. It takes time to investigate special programs and services and to get required information to schools.

Cordoni offers these hints for evaluating college and university special services:

—Look for a director trained in learning disabilities. A trained director usually means a more comprehensive program.

—Look at the range of special services offered. The ideal program has a center or clinic specifically for the learning disabled. Also, look for services such as readers, note takers, taped books, and specialized (untimed or oral) exams. Computers or word processors are also helpful aids.

—Investigate tutorial services. These often cost extra. Be sure to check on the training and/or qualifications of tutors.

—Find out what tests are required for admission. The two most commonly used college placement tests are the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) and the American College Test (ACT). Both can be taken under special conditions. For more information about the special SAT, contact Eleanor Kennedy, Educational Testing Services, Services for Handicapped Students, Princeton, NJ 08541. Telephone: (609) 921-9000. For further information on the special ACT, contact the American College Test Administration and ask for the special testing guide "Taking the ACT Assessment for Special Testing." The mailing address is 2255 N. Dubuque Road, P.O. Box 168, Iowa City, IA 52243. Telephone: (319) 337-1332.

—Find out if the school requires a psycho-educational evaluation. Some schools require an independent evaluation before admission. Others do their own testing. Some do no testing at all. Schools that require testing should be favored, Cordoni says.

Choosing a college or university is only one part of the college planning process. Once a school is chosen, appropriate courses must be selected. It's a good idea to consult advisors or the director of the learning disabilities program for advice when deciding which courses to take, says Susan A. Vogel of Barat College, Lake Forest, Illinois. In an article in the Journal of Learning Disabilities, Vogel makes the following suggestions:

Consider the course itself. How does it fit into the departmental sequence of courses? What is the level of difficulty? What are the prerequisites or assumed background knowledge and skills? What is the method of instruction? Speak to the instructor personally about the reading load, course requirements, and frequency and method of evaluation. Ask advisors how to make initial contact with professors.

Be aware of the time frame of a course. For students with long-term memory deficits, shorter grading periods and more frequent evaluations are helpful. Classes that meet three or four times per week often are preferred over classes that meet for an extended class period once a week. How much and how rapidly material is presented can also affect the ability to comprehend information.

Plan a well-balanced work load. Class preparation time is likely to be longer for learning disabled students. At many colleges with special programs for the learning disabled, students are advised to carry the minimum load (usually 12 semester hours). Four to five hours in preparation will probably be required for every hour in class. A 12-hour load could require a minimum of 48 hours of preparation per week. Some students may achieve greater academic success if they enroll as part-time students. This is especially true at the beginning of a college career when students spend a considerable amount of time working on basic skills, study habits, and time management.

Some colleges and universities require learning disabled students to take part in a summer orientation program. During orientation, students become familiar with the school, take courses to sharpen basic skills, and often undergo diagnostic testing by the staff. These programs are sometimes also open to high school students and graduates not enrolled in the college. Check with the college.

Even without a mandatory orientation program, students should not wait until the start of classes to become familiar with the school. It takes time to learn about campus facilities and their locations, to meet with key personnel, and to gather special materials. If students and faculty are familiar with one another by opening day, potential problems can be avoided. Beverly Dexter, associate professor of education at Lynchburg College, Lynchburg, Virginia, in an article in the Journal of Learning Disabilities, offers the following suggestions to ease entrance into college life for students with learning disabilities.

The Campus—To avoid confusion, students should familiarize themselves with the campus before classes start. For example, study the layout of the school bookstore and know its payment procedures. Find out how to get a student parking permit. To minimize confusion in the cafeteria, sign up for a meal plan instead of paying cash for each meal.

School Officials—Contact the dean of students and advisors before school begins to discuss specific learning problems. This will help ensure that there are no misunderstandings. If medical history is relevant to learning needs, it should also be discussed.

Special Education Department—If a school has no support program specifically for students with learning disabilities, contact the chairperson of the special education department. The chairperson usually knows what special services are available. There are many resources available on most campuses, Dexter notes, but students must explore to find those best suited to individual needs.

Professors—Talk with individual professors before classes begin to make them aware of special problems and needs. For example, if it is necessary to use a note taker or tape recorder for lectures, get the professor's permission first. A pre-class visit will also give the faculty member a first-hand impression of the student's seriousness, motivational level, and commitment to learning.

Recorded Books—For some learning disabled students it might be worthwhile to contact Recording for the Blind, Inc. This organization records student texts on tape. Also, taped books are available from regional libraries as part of the National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped. For more information on these organizations and their services, see "Sources of Special Materials for the Learning Disabled" in the section Sources of Information and Help in this Guide. Arrangements should be made as far in advance as possible. Try to contact professors early for lists of required texts.

For learning disabled high school graduates not ready for college, a precollege year or post high school program may be an alternative. In a precollege program, strengths and individual learning styles are diagnosed. Reading, study skills, and organization are taught. Classes are small and individualized counseling is usually available. See "Private and Day Schools" and "College and University Special Programs and Services" in the State-by-State Listings in this Guide to find out which schools and colleges offer precollege programs.

For additional information on specific colleges, universities, or special programs described in this Guide, write to the contact persons listed.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

Vocational training programs designed specifically for the learning disabled are increasing, but still considerably less common than special college and university programs. However, vocational education is available through many institutions including technical schools, colleges and universities, vocational centers, and state offices of vocational rehabilitation. Here is an overview of their programs:

Technical Schools. Technical schools offer programs that teach specific trades or skills such as computer science, culinary arts, auto mechanics, photography, and graphic arts. A high school diploma is not always required. A free handbook listing 98 careers that can be learned in two years or less and schools that provide the training is available from the National Association of Trade and Technical Schools. See Books and Other Materials in this Guide for ordering information. Contact the individual schools that offer career programs of interest to see what arrangements or accommodations can be made to compensate for learning disabilities.

Colleges and Universities. Many colleges and universities offer vocational programs. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 requires that these programs serve students with handicaps. Some community colleges don't even require a high school diploma. Contact individual schools for specific information on available programs.

Pilot Projects or Special Employment Programs. A limited number of rehabilitation centers and other organizations operate learning disability research or "pilot" projects. The purpose of these projects is to provide services to the learning disabled, train professionals, and conduct research on the most appropriate techniques and methods for training the learning disabled for work. These programs are usually run in conjunction with the state office of vocational rehabilitation, but it may be difficult to find information on them. Try checking with:

—the state office of vocational rehabilitation.
—the state employment office.
—the state chapter of ACLD.
—state chapters of other disability organizations such as the Easter Seal Society.
—private vocational rehabilitation training centers.
—local offices of Goodwill Industries, Inc. The primary mission of this organization is vocational training and placement of disabled people.

Private consultants and clinics. Some private consultants and clinics offer vocational services for learning disabled adults. Services might include vocational evaluations, counseling, prevocational and vocational training, job placement, job monitoring, and job maintenance. Also, some private employment agencies test and counsel job hunters.

State Offices of Vocational Rehabilitation. Since 1981, state offices of vocational rehabilitation (OVRs) have been authorized to serve the learning disabled. Although titles vary, every state has an OVR charged with helping people overcome or cope successfully with disabilities so that they can be employed. There are local branch OVRs in most cities. They are often listed under the state department of education in the blue pages of the telephone book.

School districts often coordinate services with the OVR for eligible high school students. Services may begin as early as the junior or senior year of high school. The OVR evaluates disabilities and job aptitudes, provides job counseling and training, and helps handicapped individuals find and keep jobs. Many also list available jobs. However, OVRs are required by law to help the most severely handicapped first. Also, in many cases, OVR counselors are not learning disabilities specialists. However, efforts are currently being made to inform vocational rehabilitation professionals of the unique needs and learning styles of the learning disabled.

Other sources. Look for schools that provide services for adults in the "Private and Day Schools" section of the State-by-State Listings. Many of these schools offer vocational services. Also, contact your local board of education about adult education programs. Some, like Project ABLE in Connecticut, may offer programs specifically for the learning disabled. See "State and Regional Adult Programs and Services" at the end of this article for a list of adult vocational programs, schools, independent living projects, and other services.

Many organizations offer vocational evaluation and training. However, programs that are not specifically designed for the learning disabled should be checked carefully. Some programs at rehabilitation centers are geared to the mentally retarded or the physically handicapped. Other programs make no provision for persons with learning disabilities. Keep in mind that special services and accommodations for the learning disabled in vocational programs may be as crucial to success as they are in academic programs. Services to look for include an orientation program, tutoring, testing and evaluation, counseling, note takers, tape recorders, special testing, job seeking and job placement assistance, registration assistance, and advocates.

ENTERING THE WORK FORCE

A formal analysis of personal interests, strengths, and weaknesses should be made before beginning any job hunt, personnel experts say. For the learning disabled this strategy may be particularly helpful. Once weaknesses are identified, occupations can be chosen that emphasize strengths and necessary job accommodations can be outlined.

Assistance in making this analysis is available. While still in high school, guidance counselors, vocational education counselors, or work-experience coordinators may be able to help. Individuals eligible for state office of vocational rehabilitation services can work with state vocational counselors in determining strengths and weaknesses. Some of the clinics listed in "Other Services" in the State-by-State Listings section of this Guide provide vocational evaluation and counseling services. Private job placement firms will also administer tests and advise job hunters.

Self Analysis/Job Analysis. Learning disabled job seekers should set realistic goals, suggest learning disability consultants Helen Ginandes Weiss and Martin S. Weiss, in their book The World is a Learning Place: Adults Who Have Made It Against The Odds. Even entry level jobs give employees an opportunity to prove their value through hard work and reliability.

Begin the job hunt by finding out what skills will be needed on a job and then ask if the job seeker possesses those skills. Typical entry level jobs involve answering the telephone. Answering the phone requires clear, legible handwriting, the ability to remember and write down instructions, and the ability to write while listening on the phone.

Reading, math, spelling, and the ability to meet deadlines and handle stress are important in many occupations. If a job requires writing invoices, sales orders, or reports, adequate handwriting, good addition and multiplication skills, and the ability to use a calculator, computer, or word processor may be necessary.

One way to determine interests, strengths, and weaknesses in an on-the-job setting is to work for an employment contractor or temporary job service. Temporary job services place workers in assignments ranging in length from a day to several months. Most use both skilled and unskilled workers for general office and industrial assignments. Applicants are usually tested to determine the most appropriate placement.

Office duties for temporaries may include addressing envelopes, answering the phone, typing, or word processing. Industrial tasks include quality control inspection and shipping and receiving. Some services even place workers with such specific skills as painting, carpentry, and brick-laying.

For persons with learning disabilities, there are a number of advantages to working for a temporary service. Workers can try several job assignments and discover through on-the-job experience what they do best. They also gain work experience, earn money, and can take time off between assignments if necessary or desirable. However, individuals interested in working for a temporary job service should be open to change and possess good mobility skills. Mobility skills include being able to take public transportation or drive a car and follow road maps and directions.

Social skills on the job are also important but sometimes overlooked. Lloyd W. Tindall, in an article in Early Adolescence to Early Adulthood: Volume 5, The Best of ACLD, reports that most learning disabled workers are fired not because they can't do the work, but because they can't deal with authority or can't get along with others. Learning disabled people frequently fail to perceive social situations accurately, or may not pick up subtle social clues or non-verbal communications. On the job, this may result in serious problems, Tindall says.

Finding a Job. Finding a job is a often a difficult task for anyone leaving high school or college. Again, good planning and persistence are among the keys to success. Job hunters should begin by utilizing as many resources available to them as possible. Among these resources are:

—high school or college career center or job placement services.
—high school counselors or college advisors. Ask for leads and job hunting tips.
—state employment office.
—newspaper help wanted ads. Some learning disabled people will need help going through the ads.
—private job placement firms.
—friends and family. Ask if they know anyone who is hiring. If they do, ask for a recommendation.
—trade magazines.
—the state office of vocational rehabilitation.
—the state or local chapter of ACLD.
—local chapters, branches, or offices of other disability organizations such as the Easter Seal Society.
—national organizations for learning disabled adults.
—the local library for information on careers and potential employers.

In her booklet, Steps to Independence for People with Learning Disabilities, Dale Brown, who is learning disabled herself, suggests ways for the learning disabled to cope with some specific job-hunting problems:

—The Application. If it is difficult to fill out an application, take it home or have it mailed. If necessary, have someone else fill it out. Be aware of careless errors and illegible writing.

—The Interview. It is essential to be on time. Check the time and place of the interview. Allow enough time to get there. Take extra care in dressing. People with visual perceptual problems should ask someone to check them for neatness and color and clothing coordination. If necessary, a change of clothing can be carried in a briefcase.

Job Accommodations. On the job, rule number one is: "Never, never, never, use LD as an excuse for not trying to do your best, not getting along with others, not trying to control your behavior, or refusing responsibilities that you can live up to!" says Elizabeth Robinson, a learning disabled worker, in an article in the Journal of Rehabilitation.

Arranging accommodations requires initiative on the part of the worker, Robinson says. Most employers are reluctant to restructure jobs to the needs of the disabled because they don't know how. Be prepared to show employers what accommodations can be made and how they are reasonable in terms of time, manpower, and cost. It is important to discuss problems in a positive way and to know what to ask for. Accommodations that are necessary for success on the job should be made. However, don't ask for accommodations that are not necessary to meet performance standards.

Avoid jobs where accommodations cannot be made for a disability or where compensation strategies will not help performance, Robinson says. Also, learning disabled workers should discuss their learning disabilities only with those who have a need to know. Even then, avoid discussing the disability in a manner that makes it seem that you are seeking sympathy, making excuses, or trying to be the center of attention, says Robinson. Here are some job accommodation strategies for different learning disability problems suggested and used by Robinson:

Driving—Directional problems can be helped by looking for landmarks along the regular route. These landmarks should be associated with directions, such as right, left, straight.

Dyscalculia—Arrange for someone to help with math and statistics or check work before it is submitted. Use a calculator or adding machine for simple math.

Dysgraphia—Use a typewriter or a dictating machine to draft materials. Have a typist do the final draft. This is especially helpful for people with bad handwriting or those who need to make a lot of revisions.

Hyperactivity— Individuals who are hyperactive, have a short attention span, or are easily distracted should try to get a private or semiprivate office away from busy areas. This is for the benefit of coworkers who may be distracted as well as for the benefit of the learning disabled worker. When necessary, hyperactivity can be worked off by running errands rather than waiting for others. Also, it may be helpful to switch assignments frequently or rotate among several projects in one day.

Short-term memory problems—Write plans for the day or week in a notebook or calendar. List them all and set priorities. Also, keep notes on anything important like assignments and meeting notes. Use a tape recorder if necessary. Weiss and Weiss suggest making checklists of steps to be performed for repetitive tasks.

Social skills—Find a co-worker who will act as a mentor and give honest advice and suggestions about sensitive aspects of work and social behavior. Learn to accept criticism gracefully. Insist that the mentor be honest about such things as personal behavior, remarks that were inappropriate or out of context, or behavior of co-workers that the LD person may have misinterpreted. The mentor can also give advice on when an article of clothing is no longer nice enough, no longer fits properly, or is out of fashion. In exchange, the learning disabled person can offer to help out when the work assignments of the mentor pile up.

Visual perception problems—Have a special place for everything important and always put everything in its proper place. Take care of important transactions right away.

Learning disabled people should also ask for clear, concise directions at work so that they know what is expected of them, Robinson says. Good clerical support can help learning disabled people keep files in order, correct grammar and spelling, and find incomplete or unclear thoughts, words, or sentences in written assignments. However, Robinson advises the learning disabled not to allow themselves to become overly dependent on anyone on or off the job because there is a limit on how much help a person can reasonably ask for.

Continuing Education. Despite problems, people with learning disabilities should strive to do their best at a chosen job, and to reach their full potential, Brown says. If the learning disabled choose jobs based on personal strengths and skills, and study the jobs carefully before accepting them, they have as good a chance for success as anyone else. However, like everyone else in the work force, learning disabled people need to know how to advance in a job, when to change jobs, and when to further their education.

Continuing education is critical for the learning disabled, Tindall emphasizes. High technology occupations, job advancement, and reemployment as a result of a changing economy may depend on continuing education and training.

Because of these uncertainties, like everyone, "learning disabled persons must acquire the philosophy that continuous education is a way of life," Tindall says. Failure to acquire new skills and education may result in lowered earnings or unemployment. Therefore, even after finding a first job, they must be able to identify appropriate future steps. These include seeking out and exploring new educational opportunities, available support services, and new jobs. These abilities will help ensure successful careers for the learning disabled.

Sources of Information and Help

Included in this section are national offices of major organizations concerned with learning disabilities and the learning disabled, U.S. government agencies and services (including the U.S. Department of Education), Canadian organizations concerned with learning disabilities, learning disability information centers, and sources of special materials.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS CONCERNED WITH LEARNING DISABILITIES

The following is an alphabetical list of national offices of organizations concerned with learning disabilities. Brief histories and descriptions of each organization are included. Some of the organizations are primarily for teachers, educators, and professionals in the field. Several act as advocates for the learning disabled. All provide information and help on request. For addresses and telephone numbers of state offices, branches, and chapters, see the State-by-State Listings in this Guide.

ACLD, Inc., 4156 Library Road, Pittsburgh, PA 15234. President: Anne Fleming. Executive Director: Mrs. Jean Peterson. Telephone: (412) 341-8077 or 341-1515.

Founded in 1963, ACLD is the oldest and largest volunteer organization specifically concerned with learning disabilities. There are more than 800 state and local chapters throughout the United States and Canada. ACLD works to stimulate the development of early detection programs, develop and promote legislative assistance, and create a climate of public awareness and acceptance. The organization is open to parents, educators, and others concerned about the welfare of learning disabled children and adults. The annual membership fee is $15.00. ACLD publishes a newsletter, holds an annual international conference, and distributes more than 500 publications about learning disabilities.

The Association on Handicapped Student Service Programs in Post-Secondary Education (AHSSPPE), P.O. Box 21192, Columbus, OH 43221. Executive Director: Jane E. Jarrow. Telephone: (614) 488-4972.

An organization for professionals who work with learning disabled adolescents and adults. CALLED's goal is to help bridge the gap between secondary and postsecondary school teachers, community agencies, and other organizations. Publishes newsletters and a professional journal that provide information on programs, materials, and innovative approaches to the remediation of learning disabilities. Promotes conferences, symposia, and meetings. Membership: $40.00. Newsletters only: $25.00.

Council for Exceptional Children (CEC), 1920 Association Drive, Reston, VA 22091-1589. Executive Director: Mr. Jeptha V. Greer. Telephone: (703) 620-3660.

The council is a professional organization for persons involved in the education of children with special needs. CEC was founded in 1922 and currently has some 1,000 state and local chapters in the United States and Canada and 13 special education divisions. CEC publishes a journal, holds an annual convention, and sponsors conferences on issues of current significance.

CEC's Division for Learning Disabilities (DLD), promotes the development, dissemination, and use of outstanding diagnostic and teaching practices, supports legislation for services to the learning disabled, and encourages research in the area of learning disabilities. Membership in the division is open and costs $15.00 a year in addition to the $43.00 CEC membership fee. Included with membership is a subscription to a quarterly newsletter and two professional journals.

Council for Learning Disabilities (CLD), 9013 W. Brooke Drive, Overland Park, KS 66212. Executive Secretary: Kirsten McBride. Telephone: (913) 492-3840.

CLD is primarily for professionals in the field. However, membership is open to parents and others concerned with learning disabilities. CLD has approximately 20 state and local chapters. The organization holds annual international and regional conferences. The council publishes a journal of research, theory, and opinion on learning disabilities, and a teacher-oriented newsletter. Opinion papers on important topics in the field of learning disabilities are currently being developed. Membership: $25.00 per year. Membership includes the journal and newsletter.

Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities (FCLD), 99 Park Avenue, New York, NY 10016. President: Mrs. Pete Rozelle. Executive Director: Arlyn Gardner. Telephone: (212) 687-7211.

Organized in 1977, the primary goals of the foundation are to create public awareness of learning disabilities and provide financial support for innovative projects that serve children with learning disabilities. In addition to public service advertising campaigns and other information programs, FCLD funds teacher training and education programs, information and referral services, parent information programs, and projects that directly serve learning disabled children. In addition to this guide, FCLD publishes Their World, an annual magazine for parents and others interested in and concerned about learning disabilities. The magazine is $2.00.

International Reading Association (IRA), 800 Barksdale Road, P.O. Box 8139, Newark, DE 19714. President: John C. Manning. Executive Director: Ronald W. Mitchell. Telephone: (302) 731-1600.

IRA is a professional organization for reading teachers and other educators concerned with reading and reading education. The association publishes several professional journals, including The Reading Teacher and The Journal of Reading. The annual membership fee of $18.00 includes a newsletter about IRA activities. Membership and a subscription to one of the journals is $30.00 a year.

The IRA's Disabled Reader Special Interest Group is specifically concerned with learning disabilities. Contact: Alta Palmer, P.O. Box 940, Covington, LA 70434.

National Easter Seal Society, 2023 W. Ogden Avenue, Chicago, IL 60612. President: Robert B. Coats. Executive Director: John Garrison. Telephone: (312) 243-8400.

The society is the country's oldest and largest nonprofit health care agency providing direct services to people with a wide range of disabilities, including learning disabilities. Services provided vary widely from chapter to chapter, so contact the chapter in your area to find out what services are available. State and local chapters may also make referrals to other local agencies serving people with learning disabilities. A number of publications about learning disabilities are available from the national office.

The Orton Dyslexia Society, 724 York Road, Baltimore, MD 21204. President: Sylvia O. Richardson. Administrative Director: Elinor Hartwig. Telephone: (301) 296-0232.

A nonprofit, educational association, the society promotes the study, treatment, and prevention of dyslexia. Founded in 1949 and named for Dr. Samuel T. Orton, a pioneer in the field of dyslexia, the society includes parents, educators, and other professionals. Annual membership is $35.00 and includes membership in local or regional branches. A quarterly newsletter and an annual scholarly journal, Annals of Dyslexia, are free to members. The journal contains articles about teaching reading, research in the area of language disorders, and testing. It is available to nonmembers for $10.45.

CANADIAN ORGANIZATIONS CONCERNED WITH LEARNING DISABILITIES

Canadian Association for Children and Adults with Learning Disabilities (CACLD), Kildare House, 323 Chapel Street, Ottawa, Ontario K1N 7Z2. President: Kathy Smith. Executive Director: June Borgeau. Telephone: (613) 238-5721.

The overall purpose of the association is to advance the education and general well being of children and adults with learning disabilities.

Specifically, CACLD promotes greater public awareness and understanding of learning disabilities; early recognition, diagnosis, treatment, and appropriate educational, social, recreational, and career-oriented programs for the learning disabled. The association also promotes legislation, research, and training of personnel in the field of learning disabilities and provides liaison between its membership, the Canadian government, and other appropriate organizations. Combined membership in CACLD and a provincial chapter ranges from $15.00 to $20.00 per year and includes a subscription to the CACLD's quarterly newsletter. Newsletter subscription only: $8.00.

Atlantic Conference on Learning Disabilities, P.O. Box 2036, D.E.P.S., Dartmouth, N.S. B3W 2X8. Executive Director: Judy Pelletier. Telephone: (902) 469-7282 or 469-8903.

A regional organization dedicated to educating the public on learning disabilities. Acts as a resource center and works to encourage cooperation between health, educational, social, corrections, and family services. Holds an annual conference. No membership fee. Newsletter: $5.00.

LEARNING DISABILITY INFORMATION CENTERS

Some of the organizations and centers listed here have extensive computer databases. Others have informative and useful publications available. Information services are usually free, but in some cases, fees are charged. To request information, contact the information center and describe the information or assistance needed as precisely as possible.

Closer Look/Parents' Campaign for Handicapped Children and Youth, 1201 16th Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20036. Executive Director: Barbara Scheiber. Telephone: (202) 822-7900. LD Teenline toll free number: (800) 522-3458.

The primary purpose of Closer Look is to "help families to help themselves" in raising a child with a handicap. Closer Look provides information about and referrals to services in your area. In addition, the organization publishes a number of booklets, fact sheets, and guides on various aspects of disabilities.

Closer Look also operates LD Teenline, an information and referral service for parents of learning disabled teenagers, educators, and teenagers themselves funded by the Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities. The information service is available through the toll free number listed above from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

ERIC Clearinghouse on Handicapped and Gifted Children, CEC Information Center, The Council for Exceptional Children, 1920 Association Drive, Reston, VA 22091. Associate Director: Mrs. Lynn Smarte. Telephone: (703) 620-3660.

The clearinghouse collects and stores information, articles and research on all types of handicaps, including learning disabilities. The material is indexed by topic and stored in a database. A custom computer search costs $25.00 for CEC members, $35.00 for nonmembers. Information on frequently requested topics costs $10.00. After a search, a list of abstracts available on the topic is sent.

Information Center for Individuals with Disabilities, 20 Park Plaza, Room 330, Boston, MA 02116. Executive Director: Ms. Sandy Bouzoukis. Telephone: (617) 727-5540. In-state toll free number: (800) 462-5015.

The center assists in finding appropriate facilities, services, and programs for persons with all types of disabilities and answers questions about legal rights. Much of the information is about services in Massachusetts. However, the center can provide information on services and programs throughout the country.

HEATH Resource Center, One Dupont Circle, N.W., Suite 670, Washington, DC 20036-1193. Director: Rhona Hartman. Telephone: (202) 833-4707.

The center is a national clearinghouse on postsecondary education for handicapped people, including those with learning disabilities. It maintains a resource file of postsecondary programs, including college, vocational, and other programs, including information on colleges and universities that provide support services for learning disabled students. Fact sheets and information packets are also available. The center is part of the American Council on Education, and is funded by the U.S. Department of Education.

National Association of Private Schools for Exceptional Children (NAPSEC), 2021 "K" Street, N.W., Suite 315, Washington, DC 20006. Executive Director: Susan B. Nelson. Telephone: (202) 296-1800.

The association provides a free referral service to parents and others seeking educational facilities for children with special needs. The association also publishes a directory of member schools. The directory is $16.00. Schools that belong to NAPSEC must adhere to and practice a code of ethics.

National Information Center for Educational Media (NICEM). Access Innovations, P.O. Box 40130, Albuquerque, NM 87196. Director: James Johnstone. Telephone: (505) 265-3591. Out-of-state toll free number: (800) 421-8711.

NICEM maintains a database called the National Information Center for Special Education Materials (NICSEM). However, no new information has been entered since 1980. This database includes information on all types of special education instructional material including audio recordings, talking books, and filmstrips. Although the service is designed for teachers and other professionals, it may also be useful to parents. The fee for using NICSEM varies according to the information requested. Special education file available on-line through Dialog Information Service.

National Rehabilitation Information Center (NARIC), 4407 Eighth Street, N.E., The Catholic University of America, Washington, DC 20017. Director: Susan Flowers. Telephone: (202) 635-5826 (Voice/TDD).

The center provides information on research, products, and resources in the field of disabilities to professionals, students, and handicapped individuals. NARIC also makes referrals to other organizations and resources. Custom searches of the REHABDATA database for information on many special topics, including learning disabilities, are available. The ABLEDATA database contains information on more than 11,000 commercially available aids and equipment useful to disabled persons. The fee for a search on either database is $10.00 for the first 100 listings.

National Information Center for Handicapped Children and Youth (NICHCY), P.O. Box 1492, Washington, DC 20013. Project Director: Ms. Toni Haas. Telephone: (703) 522-3332.

NICHCY has developed fact sheets that provide concise definitions and descriptions of various handicaps, including learning disabilities. NICHCY also supplies fact sheets on resources available in individual states and at the national level. In addition, the center sponsors workshops and conferences for parents, educators, and others concerned about learning disabilities.

Resources for Children with Special Needs, Inc., 200 Park Avenue, South, Suite 816, New York, NY 10003. Director: Karen T. Schlesinger. Telephone: (212) 677-4650.

An information, referral, advocacy, and support center primarily for parents and professionals in the New York City area. The organization provides information about and makes referrals to public and private schools, camps and summer programs, medical and therapeutic resources, and other facilities and services. Organizes an annual "special camp" fair primarily for New York City area children. Programs and services are checked by on-site visits and personal contact. When possible, questions are answered by telephone or by letter, but appointments are encouraged. There is a fee for consultations. However, fees are based on a client's ability to pay, and all or part of the fee can be waived.

SpecialNet, National Association of State Directors of Special Education, 2021 "K" Street, N.W., Suite 315, Washington, DC 20006. Director of SpecialNet: Gary Snodgrass. Telephone: (202) 296-1800.

A computer network that allows users to access special education information and to send to and receive information from other users. SpecialNet electronic bulletin boards are updated daily and provide information about legislative activities, advocacy groups, new products and publications, consultants in various areas of education, and other topics. To use SpecialNet, you must have access to a terminal or a microcomputer with telephone communication capability. Annual subscriptions range from $200.00 to $1100.00, depending on the services needed. The cost of access time varies from $4.00 to $13.00 and depends upon the time of day that the system is used.

SPECIAL MATERIALS FOR THE LEARNING DISABLED

Recorded books, magazines, and other special materials are available for persons with learning disabilities that make it difficult or impossible for them to read printed material. Here is information on several such organizations. Some are free, others charge fees for their services.

Recording for the Blind, Inc. (RFB), 20 Roszel Road, Princeton, NJ 08540. Telephone: (609) 452-0606.

Recording for the Blind loans recorded educational books to people who cannot read standard printed materials because of visual, physical, or perceptual handicaps. RFB also provides recording services when a needed book is not already available. Services are free. Applications for the service are available on request. For persons with learning disabilities or dyslexia, a disability statement on the application must by signed by a physician or a learning disabilities specialist.

RFB provides recorded books on special cassettes that contain four hours of recorded text. These cassettes cannot be played on standard cassette tape machines. Special tape players can be purchased from the American Printing House for the Blind, 1839 Frankfort Avenue, Louisville, KY 40206. Telephone: (502) 895-2405. Special machines are also available on a free-loan basis for registered borrowers of the National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped (see separate listing).

A catalog listing more than 60,000 RFB titles is available for $14.00. Payment must be included with the order. Catalog supplements are sent free with each order. All RFB recorded books are provided on a one-year free loan basis. Loan renewals of up to one additional year are granted on written request. Books are sent with provision for postage-free return.

National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped, The Library of Congress, 1291 Taylor Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20542. Director: Frank Kurt Cylke. Telephone: (202) 287-5100. Toll free answering service: (800) 424-8567.

Books, magazines, and other publications on records and tapes are available through the National Library Service. More than 38,000 books and 70 magazines are currently available. The service is free for people with reading disabilities caused by an organic dysfunction or a physical handicap. The dysfunction or handicap must be certified by a physician.

Books for the program are selected on the basis of their appeal to a wide range of interests. Included are best sellers, biographies, fiction, and how-to books.

The special materials are distributed through a network of more than 160 libraries across the country. Users select from a catalog issued bimonthly. Materials requested are sent and returned by postage-free mail. Special equipment such as talking book phonographs and cassette tape players may also be borrowed.

For application forms and a list of libraries where special materials are available, contact The Library of Congress or a local library.

Books on Tape, Inc., P.O. Box 7900, Newport Beach, CA 92660. President: Duvall Y. Hecht. Toll free information number: (800) 626-3333.

Provides fiction and non-fiction books on cassette tapes for a fee. The rental period is four weeks. Tapes can be played on standard equipment.

Franklin County Special Education Cooperative, Box 440, Union, MO 63084. Director: Becky Schroeder. Media Coordinator: Angie Donahue. Telephone: (314) 583-8936.

A nonprofit organization that provides textbooks on tape to individuals, schools, and groups for a fee. A catalog listing available titles can be purchased for $2.50 plus postage and handling. A book recording service is also available.

National Information Center for the Association of Radio Reading Services, ARRS, Box 847, Lawrence, KS 66044. President: Rosie Hurwitz. Toll free information number (except Kansas): (800) 255-2777. Kansas telephone: (913) 864-4600.

Radio Reading Services broadcasts educational programming that can be received only on special closed circuit radios. Receivers are provided free of charge to persons who cannot read because of blindness, old age, or learning disability. There is no official application form—each case is judged individually. Contact the association's National Information Center for information on local availability of Radio Reading Services.

State-by-State Listings

This section contains comprehensive state-by-state listings of special programs, schools, and services for children and adults with learning disabilities. Descriptions of specific resources and services available in each state are divided into seven major categories:

1. Offices of organizations concerned with learning disabilities.
2. State department of education learning disabilities personnel.
3. Private and day schools.
4. Summer camps and programs.
5. College and university special programs and services.
6. Hospital clinics.
7. Other services.

Within each state, information on schools, summer camps, hospital clinics, and other services is listed in alphabetical order by city. State and national organizations and college and university programs are listed in alphabetical order by name.

Following are detailed descriptions of the information contained in each of the seven sections and some suggestions on how the information can be used.

Offices of Organizations Concerned with Learning Disabilities

Listed in this section are state offices and officers of national organizations. Included are state offices, branches, and chapters of ACLD, Inc., the Orton Dyslexia Society, the Council for Exceptional Children, the Easter Seal Society, and other groups concerned with learning disabilities.

The national organizations do not necessarily have offices, branches, or chapters in every state, and specific information and services available through state offices will vary widely. However, state offices and officers may be able to provide valuable information and help. Information and services available may include:

—lists of private learning disabilities diagnosticians, consultants, therapists, tutors, psychologists, and other specialists in your area.
—lists of local and area recreational and support groups for teenagers and adults with learning disabilities at local YMCA's and other community service organizations.
—legal referral services, and in some cases, advocacy and legal support.

State Department of Education Learning Disabilities Personnel

The person who supervises learning disabilities education in each state is listed. Many states now also have consultants or specialists in learning disabilities education. When this is the case, the names of these consultants or specialists are also listed. A state department of education can often provide information and materials on:

—learning disabilities, including teaching and working with learning disabled children at home.
—the rights of children with learning disabilities.
—special schools and school programs, including vocational training and college and university programs.
—due process and due process hearings.

Private and Day Schools

Federal law requires public schools to make special provisions for the education of children with learning disabilities. However, some parents choose to have their children attend private schools. This section lists private preschools, elementary, secondary, and adult schools that have specifically indicated that they offer services to students with learning disabilities. Schools are listed in alphabetical order by city of location.

Most of the schools listed in this Guide offer a full range of services to students with learning disabilities. This means that these schools devote a major portion of their resources to serving students with learning disabilities. Typically, a wide range of special programs, services, and facilities are available. Frequently, professional staff members at these schools are specially trained and/or certified in the area of learning disabilities.

Some schools listed have indicated that they provide only limited services for students with learning disabilities. This may mean that most of the students attending the school are not learning disabled. Often, these schools accept only a limited number of students with learning disabilities, accept students with mild learning disabilities, or accept students with learning disabilities only under special circumstances.

If a private school that you are interested in is not listed in this Guide, check with the school.

The private and day school listings contain a variety of useful information. The description of each school may include information on:

—preschool programs.
—summer programs offered.
—ages and grade levels served.
—current and maximum student enrollment.
—number of staff (both full and part-time).
—scholarships and financial aid available.
—special diagnostic, counseling, medical, or other services.
—special recreational activities and/or facilities available.
—special techniques, approaches, or therapies used.
—the availability of special precollege or post high school programs for high school graduates who might not be ready for college.
—the availability of special services (tutoring, diagnosis, remediation, etc.) to people not enrolled in the school.

Summer Camps and Programs

Included under this heading are recreational camps, camps with academic programs, and camps with special programs such as diagnostic clinics.

Summer camps and programs are listed in alphabetical order by city of location. To make it easier to contact camp personnel during the off-season, a permanent mailing address and telephone number are given for most summer camps and programs.

Some camps and programs listed are specifically for children with learning disabilities. These camps and programs offer a wide range of special programs, services, and facilities.

Many camps and programs indicate that they provide only limited services for children with learning disabilities. This may mean that most of the children attending the camp or program are not learning disabled. Often, these camps and programs accept only a limited number of children with learning disabilities, accept only those with mild learning disabilities, or accept children with learning disabilities only under special circumstances.

Summer camp and program descriptions generally include information on:

—camp location.
—ages and grade levels served.

—maximum enrollment.
—special services available.
—academic programs offered.
—recreational activities.
—scholarships and financial aid available.

Important Note: Summer programs run by schools, clinics, and some other organizations are not listed here. Check under the headings "Private and Day Schools," "Hospital Clinics," and "Other Services" for additional summer program offerings.

College and University Special Programs and Services

Colleges and universities are in alphabetical order by name. Each of the colleges and universities listed offers one or more of the following to students with learning disabilities:

—a special program designed specifically for students with learning disabilities.
—special services for handicapped students, including students with learning disabilities.
—a special center or clinic that offers services to the learning disabled.

● Special Programs. The symbol at left indicates a special college or university program designed specifically for students with learning disabilities. Special program descriptions include information on:

—admissions requirements of the college and/or the special learning disabilities program.
—special program conditions and requirements.
—the focus and content of the special program.
—special services offered.
—the name of the program director, learning disabilities specialist, or other contact person.

Centers/clinics. Some of the college and university centers and clinics listed offer services to the community. These are described as "open to the public" in this Guide. Others limit services to students attending the college or university.

Some centers and clinics specialize in learning disabilities, others are general tutoring or remedial study centers open to all students, including the learning disabled. Services offered, ages and grade levels served, and other important information is included in the description of each center or clinic. Some colleges and universities operate more than one center/clinic. Note: Center and clinic addresses are listed only when that address is different from the college or university address.

Special Services. Special services may include readers, tutoring, ombudsman, special examinations, financial aid, counseling, diagnostic testing, taped books, and other special accommodations. However, these special services are typically available to all handicapped students, not just those with learning disabilities.

When available, the total enrollment of a college or university and the number of students with learning disabilities are given.

Hospital Clinics

Hospital clinics are listed in alphabetical order by city of location. All of the hospital clinics listed in this Guide offer services to the learning disabled on an outpatient basis. Some also have inpatient programs. Other special programs and services for the learning disabled that may be available through the hospital clinics listed include:

—preschools.
—elementary and/or secondary schools.
—diagnostic, academic, and psychological testing.
—tutoring.
—counseling.
—speech, language, and occupational therapy.
—social services.
—recommendations for school placement.
—consultation with the child's regular school.

Other Services

A number of organizations offering services to persons with learning disabilities do not fall into any of the six previous categories. Those organizations are listed here in alphabetical order by city of location. These organizations include, but are not limited to:

—private clinics.
—educational centers.

—day and residential treatment centers.
—rehabilitation centers.
—mental health centers.

All of the organizations listed offer at least some services to children or adults with learning disabilities. These services may include after school tutoring, diagnostic testing, academic and psychological testing, counseling; speech, language, and occupational therapy; social services, recommendations for school placement, and consultation with a child's regular school.

Some of the organizations listed also hold workshops for parents, educators, and professionals, and in-service training for teachers.

IMPORTANT NOTE: All of the information in the State-by-State Listings was furnished by the organizations themselves and is provided here as a service to parents, professionals, educators, and others interested in and concerned about learning disabilities. The Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities is not responsible for the accuracy or completeness of the information. Also, FCLD does not endorse or recommend any specific programs, schools, organizations, or services. For complete information, contact the individual organizations listed.

Books and Other Materials

This section describes important books, magazines, and other materials related to learning disabilities. Within categories, materials are listed in alphabetical order by title. Materials for this section were selected for their timeliness, usefulness, and relevance. Most are recent—1980 or later. However, some older books and other materials are included because they are still important, relevant, and helpful. Price and ordering information is provided. However, many of the books and other materials may be available at local libraries at no cost. Also, librarians may be able to supply names and addresses of local learning disabilities organizations, agencies, and support groups.

BOOKS

Academics and Beyond: Volume 4, The Best of ACLD, edited by William Cruickshank and Eli Tash, 1983, 193 pages. Syracuse University Press, 1600 Jamesville Avenue, Syracuse, NY 13210, $13.95. For professionals. Contains selected papers from the 1982 ACLD International Conference. Topics covered include communication, administration and postschool years, early education and activity programs.

Describes innovative support programs in sports, recreation/summer camps, and cultural institutions. Articles are written by people with learning disabilities or professionals who work with LD children.

Note: In 1985, three manuals funded by grants from the Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities will become available to assist advocacy attorneys, juvenile and family court judges, and police and probation officers recognize and help learning disabled youth at risk in the juvenile justice system. Information on how to obtain these manuals is available from:

American Bar Association, Child Advocacy and Protection Center, 1800 "M" Street, Washington, DC 20036. Contact: Matthew Bogin. Telephone: (202) 331-2250.

National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, P.O. Box 8978, 900 W. First Street, Reno, NV 89507. Contact: James Toner. Telephone: (702) 784-6012.

Research and Development Training Institute, Inc., P.O. Box 15112, Phoenix, AZ 85060. Contact: Dorothy Crawford. Telephone: (602) 956-8334.

FCLD, through a grant to the American Library Association (ALA) has initiated a national effort to make local public libraries resource centers for information and programs that assist parents and teachers who work with learning disabled children. For more information, librarians, parents, and teachers can contact:

American Library Association, Division of Services to Children, 50 E. Huron Street, Chicago, IL 60611. Telephone: (312) 944-6780.

A Dictionary of LD Terms

The words, terms, acronyms, and abbreviations defined in this dictionary are frequently used in parent-professional communications and in a wide range of material related to learning disabilities. Words or terms printed in boldface italics are separately defined.

ACLD—Association for Children and Adults with Learning Disabilities; ACLD, Inc.

adaptive physical education—a special physical education program developed to fit the limits and disabilities of persons with handicaps.

agnosia—inability to recognize objects and/or events through the senses. There are several types of agnosia. A person with auditory agnosia does not recognize nonverbal sounds such as the ring of an alarm clock or a siren. A person with auditory-verbal agnosia is unable to understand spoken words. A person with tactile agnosia cannot recognize objects by touch. A person with visual agnosia cannot recognize people, places, or objects by sight.

amphetamines—a group of drugs used to stimulate the cerebral cortex of the brain. Sometimes used to treat hyperactivity. (See also Dexedrine and Ritalin.)

anomia—inability to recall the names of people, places, or objects.

aphasia—inability to express oneself through speech, writing, or signs, or to comprehend written or spoken language. Individuals with aphasia may know what they want to say but are unable to say it.

apraxia—inability to do fine motor acts such as drawing shapes and figures or copying words and letters. A person with apraxia cannot produce and sequence the movements necessary to perform these kinds of tasks.

attention deficit disorders (ADD)—a term frequently used by physicians to describe the academic and behavioral problems of children with learning disabilities. Formerly called minimal brain dysfunction or hyperkinetic syndrome.

attention span—the length of time an individual can concentrate on a task without being distracted or losing interest. (See also distractibility.)

auditory discrimination—the ability to hear similarities and differences in sounds. For example, to recognize the difference in sound between p and b or pail and bail.

auditory memory—the ability to remember sounds, syllables, and words.

auditory perception—the ability to interpret and understand what is heard. Some learning disabled persons cannot differentiate between similar sounds or pick out one specific sound from several other sounds.

behavior modification—a technique intended to change behavior by rewarding desirable actions and ignoring or "negatively rewarding" undesirable actions.

binocular fusion—the blending of separate images from each eye into a single meaningful image.

catastrophic reaction—extreme terror, grief, frustration, or anger without apparent cause. May be triggered by changes in routine, unexpected events, or overstimulation. Children reacting in this manner may throw or break things, scream uncontrollably, or burst into tears.

CEC—Council for Exceptional Children.

central nervous system (CNS)—the brain and spinal cord.

cerebral cortex—the outer layer of the brain; controls thinking, feeling, and voluntary movement.

CNS—See central nervous system.

cognitive style—a person's typical approach to learning activities and problem solving. For example, some people carefully analyze each task, deciding what must be done and in what order. Others react impulsively to situations.

COH—Committee on the Handicapped.

conceptualization—the process of forming a general idea from what is observed. For example, seeing apples, bananas, and oranges and recognizing that they are all fruit.

congenital—a condition existing at birth or before birth. Congenital does not imply that a condition is hereditary.

coordination—the harmonious functioning of muscles in the body to perform complex movements.

cross dominance—a condition in which the preferred eye, hand, or foot are not on the same side of the body. For example, a person may be right-footed and right-eyed but left-handed. Also called mixed dominance.

decoding—the process of getting meaning from written or spoken symbols.

developmental lag—a delay in some aspect of physical or mental development.

Dexedrine—trade name for one of several stimulant drugs often given to modify hyperactivity in children.

disinhibition—lack of restraint in responding to a situation. A child exhibiting disinhibition reacts impulsively and often inappropriately.

distractibility—the shifting of attention from the task at hand to sounds, sights, and other stimuli that normally occur in the environment.

due process—the application of law to ensure that an individual's rights are protected. When applied to children with learning disabilities, due process means that parents have the right to request a full review of any educational program developed for their child. A due process hearing may be requested to ensure that all requirements of Public Law 94-142 have been met.

dysarthria—a disorder of the speech muscles that affects the ability to pronounce words.

dyscalculia—inability to understand or use mathematical symbols or functions. A child with dyscalculia may be able to read and write but be unable to perform mathematical calculations.

dysfunction—any disturbance or impairment in the normal functioning of an organ or body part.

dysgraphia—inability to produce legible handwriting.

dyslexia—impairment of the ability to read. The impairment may be due to learning disabilities, emotional or developmental problems, or other factors. A dyslexic sees printed words upside down, reversed, blurred, backwards, or otherwise distorted. Some authorities feel that the term is misused and reading problems must be described more specifically.

early intervention program—a program specially designed to assist developmentally disabled infants and preschool children. The purpose of this type of program is to help prevent problems as the child matures.

electroencephalogram (EEG)—a graphic recording of electrical currents developed in the cerebral cortex during brain functioning. Sometimes called a "brain wave test." A machine called an electroencephalograph records the pattern of these electrical currents on paper.

encoding—the process of changing oral language into written symbols.

etiology—the study of the cause or origin of a condition or disease.

expressive language—communication through writing, speaking, and/or gestures.

eye-hand coordination—the ability of the eyes and hands to work together to complete a task. Examples are drawing and writing.

FCLD—Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities.

figure-ground discrimination—the ability to sort out important information from the surrounding environment. For example, hearing a teacher's voice while ignoring other classroom noises.

fine motor—the use of small muscles for precision tasks such as writing, tying bows, or zipping a zipper.

gross motor—the use of large muscles for activities requiring strength and balance. Examples are walking, running, and jumping.

handicapped—any person with any physical and/or mental disability who has difficulty in doing certain tasks such as walking, seeing, hearing, speaking, learning, or working. Federal law defines handicapped children as those who are "mentally retarded, hard of hearing, deaf, speech impaired, visually handicapped, seriously emotionally disturbed, orthopedically impaired, other health impaired, blind, multihandicapped, or as having specific learning disabilities" and who require special educational services because of these disabilities.

hyperactivity (or hyperkinesis)—disorganized and disruptive behavior characterized by constant and excessive movement. A hyperactive child usually has difficulty sticking to one task for an extended period and may react more intensely to a situation than a normal child.

IEP—See Individualized Education Plan.

impulsivity—reacting to a situation without considering the consequences.

Individualized Education Plan (IEP)—a written educational prescription developed by a school for each handicapped or learning disabled child. Sometimes called an Individualized Education Program. School districts are required by law to develop these plans. An IEP must contain:

—the child's present levels of educational performance.
—annual and short-term educational goals.
—the specific special education program and related services that will be provided to the child.
—the extent to which the child will participate in regular education program with non-handicapped children.
—a statement of when services will begin and how long they will last.
—provisions for evaluating the effectiveness of the program and the student's performance. This evaluation must occur at least once a year.

IQ—intelligence quotient. The ratio between a person's chronological age (measured in years) and mental age (as measured by an intelligence test), multiplied by 100.

kinesthetic—pertaining to the muscles.

kinesthetic method—a way of teaching words by using the muscles. For example, a student might trace the outline of a word with a finger while looking at the word and saying the word aloud.

laterality—the tendency to use the hand, foot, eye, and ear on a particular side of the body. For example, many people use their right hand when eating and their right foot when kicking.

LD—learning disability, learning disabled, learning disabilities.

LEA—local education agency.

learning disabilities (LD)—disorders of the basic psychological processes that affect the way a child learns. Many children with learning disabilities have average or above average intelligence. Learning disabilities may cause difficulties in listening, thinking, talking, reading, writing, spelling, or arithmetic. Included are perceptual handicaps, dyslexia, and developmental aphasia. Excluded are learning difficulties caused by visual, hearing, or motor handicaps, mental retardation, emotional disturbances, or environmental disadvantage.

learning disorder—damage or impairment to the nervous system that causes a learning disability.

learning style—the channels through which a person best understands and retains learning. All individuals learn best through one or more channels: visual, auditory, motor, or a combination of these.

lesion—abnormal change in body tissue due to injury or disease.

mainstreaming—the practice of placing handicapped children with special educational needs into regular classrooms.

maturation lag—delayed maturity in one or several skills or areas of development.

milieu therapy—a clinical technique designed to control a child's environment and minimize conflicting and confusing information.

minimal brain dysfunction (MBD)—a broad and unspecific term formerly used to describe learning disabilities.

mixed dominance—See cross dominance.

modality—the sensory channel used to acquire information. Visual, auditory, tactile, kinesthetic, olfactory (odors), and gustatory (taste) are the most common modalities.

multidisciplinary team—in education, a group made up of a child's classroom teacher and several educational specialists that evaluates the child's handicap and prepares an Individualized Education Plan for the child.

multisensory—involving most or all of the senses.

neurological examination—testing of the sensory or motor responses to determine if there is impairment of the nervous system.

norm-referenced test—See standardized test.

ombudsman—an official appointed to investigate complaints and speak for individuals with grievances.

organicity—a disorder of the central nervous system; brain damage.

Orton-Gillingham approach—a method for teaching individuals with learning disabilities. The technique, devised by Dr. Samuel Orton, Anna Gillingham, and Bessie Stillman, stresses a multisensory approach to learning.

perceptual handicap—an inability to process or interpret sensory information.

perceptual-motor—muscle activity resulting from information received through the senses.

perseveration—the repeating of words, motions, or tasks. A child who perseverates often has difficulty shifting to a new task and continues working on an old task long after classmates have stopped.

phonics—a method of teaching reading and spelling that stresses symbol-sound relationships.

Public Law (P.L.) 94-142—the federal Education for All Handicapped Children Act that became law in 1975. P.L. 94-142 requires each state to provide free and appropriate public education to all handicapped children between the ages of 3 and 21. The law also requires that an Individualized Education Plan be prepared for each handicapped child, that parents must have access to their child's school records and are entitled to a due process hearing if they are dissatisfied with the educational plan.

Rehabilitation Act of 1973—the Civil Rights Act for the Handicapped. The act prohibits discrimination on the basis of physical or mental handicap in all federally-assisted programs. Section 504 of the act stipulates that handicapped people are entitled to:

—the same rights and benefits as non-handicapped applicants and employees.
—all medical services and medically-related instruction available to the public.
—participate in vocational rehabilitation, senior citizen activities, day care (for disabled children), or any other social service program receiving federal assistance on an equal basis with non-handicapped persons.
—an appropriate elementary and secondary education for physically or mentally handicapped children.

reversal—the tendency to reverse the position of letters, syllables, or words in reading or writing. For example, a child may write b for d or read bat for tab. See also transposition.

Ritalin—trade name for one of several stimulant drugs often given to modify hyperactivity in children.

SEA—state education agency.

self-concept—how a person feels and thinks about himself or herself. Sometimes called self-image.

sensorimotor—relationship between sensation and movement. Sometimes spelled sensory motor.

SLD—See specific language disability.

Slingerland method—a highly structured, multisensory teaching method designed for group instruction of persons with learning disabilities. Named for its developer, Beth Slingerland.

special education—instruction specifically designed for handicapped children.

specific language disability (SLD)—difficulty in some aspect of learning how to read and write.

standardized test—a test that compares a child's performance with the performance of a large group of similar children (usually children of the same age). Also called a norm-referenced test. IQ tests and most achievement tests are standardized.

structure—a calibrated, consistent use of rules, limits, and routines. The use of structure reassures a child with learning disabilities that the environment is somewhat predictable and stable.

syndrome—a set of symptoms that indicates a specific disorder.

tactile—having to do with the sense of touch.

transposition—changing the sequence of letters, syllables, or words when reading or writing. For example, reading sing as sign or little red engine as red little engine. See also reversal.

VAKT—acronym for visual, auditory, kinesthetic, tactile. A multisensory approach to teaching developed by Grace Fernald. A child might look at a word and say it out loud while tracing it in the air or on paper.

visual discrimination—the ability to perceive similarities and differences in shapes, colors, numbers, letters, and words.

visual memory—the ability to remember what is seen. For example, children with visual memory problems often have difficulty in developing a sight vocabulary.

visual-motor—related to the ability to integrate visual information with appropriate body movement.

visual perception—the ability to correctly interpret what is seen. For example, a child sees a triangle and identifies it as a triangle.

WISC-R—Wechsler Intelligence Scale for Children, Revised. A test measuring intelligence in the areas of language and performance. Often used to assess children who may need special education.

word attack skills—the ability to visually and phonetically analyze unfamiliar words.
